Call for Papers

The Journal of Psychology: Interdisciplinary and Applied is launching a Call for papers for the special issue on “The Psychology of Health and Illness.” Because The Journal of Psychology usually publishes articles on various psychological maladjustments and on issues affecting mental health in positive and aversive manners, we would like now to explore the influence of emotions, cognitions, and lifestyle on the causes, identification, and treatment of bodily illnesses, and on maintaining health and vitality. The areas that could contribute and have dealt with the topic include, but are not limited to, psychology, medicine, sociology, history, healthcare (both traditional and complimentary), and philosophy.

Please submit your manuscripts, in APA 6th edition style, to the Journal of Psychology: Interdisciplinary and Applied with entitling the manuscript “Special Issue- Title of Your Manuscript.” Kindly indicate in the journal’s website that your manuscript is meant to be included in this special issue. The due date for submission is Sept. 30, 2017, with earlier submissions encouraged. We aim to publish the special issue in the spring of 2018.

We encourage submission of review articles, but will also consider research papers.

Please submit manuscripts through the journal’s website, but if you have any questions or need more information about this special issue, please feel free to write to the guest editor Ami Rokach, Ph.D. at arokach@yorku.ca.
